Although enshrined in the US Constitution, the pursuit of happiness, some Jungians suggest, is worse than fruitless. Jung would approve of the intentional cultivation of personal growth and human thriving, however. If one could discard the insufferable swamp of happy face emojis and seek instead meaning and purpose, positive relationships, and the accomplishment emanating from engagement with one's calling, what is reaped, then, might more closely resemble the unfolding of the soul's path, potentially a redemption from suffering, bringing fulfillment, contentment, and well-being. Learn how recent research is informing the fields of psychology, health, aging, institutional outlook and education.
